

DIPLOMA IN MODERN APPLIED PSYCHOLOGY

The background is a vibrant green with a complex, low-poly geometric pattern. Overlaid on this are several interlocking gears in a lighter shade of green. Thin, white lines resembling circuitry or neural pathways crisscross the entire image, adding a sense of technology and interconnectedness.

THE TWELVE JUNGIAN ARCHETYPES

THE TWELVE JUNGIAN ARCHETYPES

The word archetype derives from the ancient Greek word, archétypon, meaning 'something moulded first as a model'. Carl Jung argued that universal, mythic characters (i.e. archetypes) resided within the collective unconsciousness of people, an argument which strayed far away from Freud.

The archetypes Jung formulated were defined by his study of multicultural symbols and mythologies. He theorised that these archetypes represent identifiable behaviours in others which have a performance rate similar to that of animal instincts; these behaviours are automatic. Archetypal projections, as demonstrated by protagonists in films or books, influence other people to regard the person solely as an archetype and not as a complex individual. This is dangerous because followers and fans of certain archetypes, be they fictional or not, lose the ability to regard the person objectively.

The Rebel:

Rebels are known as transgressors who refuse to follow the rules or fit in with the rest of society. They're afraid of being powerless or ineffective in life and are driven by a desire to be outrageous and shock, disrupt or destroy the status quo. Of course, not all rebels turn to revenge and crime; in fact, their desire for revolution can be inspiring and beneficial to those in society who they are passionate about empowering and protecting. Because they're driven to overturn what isn't working, rebels can be passionate advocates for social change and radical freedom for those who deserve it.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

The Jester:

The motto of the jester type in life is 'YOLO'; they believe life is a game to be played but can only be played once, so you might as well do everything you can to enjoy it. Jesters tend to live in the moment and not take anything in life too seriously. Their lack of seriousness can be both a blessing and a curse; whilst life's too short to be taken too seriously, and more people should joke around and invest more time in play, their joking ways can be regarded as frivolity and immaturity in most working contexts.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

THE TWELVE JUNGIAN ARCHETYPES

The Lover:

Lovers are naturally intimate and devoted people. They're driven in life by the desire to have deep and meaningful relationships with not only people but their work and environment. By focussing on developing their own physical and emotional attractiveness, lovers become known as sensationalist and enthusiastic partners, friends and team members. However, lovers are deeply afraid of being rejected, unwanted, disliked or alone, they sometimes slip into a habit of being people pleasers at the cost of their identity and values.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

The Caregiver:

The caregiver is someone who always extends themselves to others through their love, sincere care and protection. They are altruistic and selfless in their daily lives, and they strive to help and support others in every possible way. However, they're susceptible to not only being exploited by others for their caring nature, but they're also at risk of succumbing to martyrdom in the process.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

The Regular:

The regular believes in the equality of all people and is driven by their desire to connect with others. They are empathetic, grounded and realistic. They connect with others by developing a solid collection of virtues which they never lapse on, and they never try to be anything out of the ordinary. However, their desire for union and connection can result in them blending in with others for the sake of meaningless or trivial relationships.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

THE TWELVE JUNGIAN ARCHETYPES

The Innocent:

The innocent is an optimist who believes firmly in the freedom of self and accepting those for being who they are at all times. They are largely driven in life by the pursuit of happiness, both internally and externally. However, their ability to see the good in everything can make them susceptible to being abused or manipulated by others, as they are by nature unquestioning people pleasers with a fear of being punished for doing anything wrong.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

The Ruler:

Rulers are obsessed with power; they desire to control all aspects of their life and strive to fulfil authoritarian and delegate roles in society. They are capable of bringing order to any kind of situation and they expect others to live up to their standards by striving for excellence. However, their authority makes them rather imposing and demanding of others.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

The Sage:

Sages use their intelligence and analytical skills to uncover the truth and understand the world around them. They are driven in life by their devoted pursuit for knowledge and understanding and invest most of their time in self-reflection. However, this dedicated and all-consuming pursuit of knowledge can mean that sages study forever but never take action, resulting in them living a very static life mentally, professionally and emotionally.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

THE TWELVE JUNGIAN ARCHETYPES

The Magician:

Like the rebel, magicians make great revolutionaries because they believe they can make anything happen. They are in a constant state of growth and change in order to make their dreams come true. They're incredibly talented at finding win-win situations in life, but the means by which they do this are not always honourable; in fact, some magician can become manipulative in order to get their way.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

The Hero:

The hero type pride themselves of being a courageous and competent winner, protector, team player and crusader. Their main goal in life is to master fields which help improve the world and the lives of those around them, usually through brave and daring means. They have a rare resistance to strife and suffering, as they are determined to fight through anything for both honour and power. However, this can result in some heroes becoming arrogant and hard-headed.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

The Creative:

Creatives dedicate their lives to developing artistic talent and skill in order to add their artistic vision to the cultural world they are apart of. With a mission to create something with enduring value, creators spend their lives transforming their imaginary world into a meaningful and powerful reality. However, due to their fear of mediocrity and failure, artists can waste many years of their lives shackled to their perfectionism.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

THE TWELVE JUNGIAN ARCHETYPES

The Explorer:

Explorer types cannot stand being caged in or confined to one location and situation in life. Their core drive is their desire for freedom and exploration in order to find out more about themselves and others around the world. Explorers have incredible ambition and autonomy, but they are susceptible to becoming aimless and isolated if their lives are left unmanaged.

Q. Do you know anyone who functions out of this archetype? Write down the names of those who you know operate out of this role and note how you related to these people (did you get on? Were there parts of them you found challenging due to this archetype? Etc.)

FINAL REFLECTION:

Now, take a moment to think of different types of people in your life, from those who anger you, to those who you can't be bothered with being around, those who excite you and those who you love being around. Try and categorise them according to these 12 Jungian archetypes and spot any trends there may be. Ask yourself what role certain archetypes play in your relationships with other people and consider what approach you can take towards certain archetypes to make your time with them more manageable.

